Report Highlights:

South China is an excellent market for U.S. food and agricultural exports, because the local population has the means to afford high value imports and experience in consuming such products. This report outlines the various opportunities available to U.S. exporters in the South China market and how the ATO can help.

I. South China General Market Situation

South China, particularly Guangdong province's Pearl River Delta, not only is one of the wealthiest regions of China, but also continues to be an excellent market for U.S. food and agricultural products. In addition, Guangdong province is the home of many of China's food and beverage importers. Taking advantage of the south's more flexible customs regime, these importers bring in millions of Dollars worth of overseas products every year for consumption in the region and distribution to domestic markets further north.

Guangdong province's urban residents enjoy one of the highest standards of living in China. In 1999, urban residents of Guangdong province had an average real income of 9,205.60 RMB. During the same year, only the urban residents of Shanghai and Beijing had higher average real incomes. With such relatively high incomes, Guangdong's urban residents in comparison with those of other Chinese provinces often can afford many better quality and higher priced imported products.

Availability of imported food and beverage products is not a problem for south China's consumers. Imports are present on many local retail outlets' shelves and are used as ingredients for many dishes at numerous local restaurants. However, import preferences tend towards products which could be incorporated into local cuisine. In addition, both the retail and HRI sectors prefer purchasing small, single serving packages over bulk packages.

Much of China's imported food and beverage products entry the country through Guangdong province in south China. Local importers like the more flexible customs regime in the region and easy access to Hong Kong's transportation and financial infrastructure. Due to this situation, south China's Guangdong province is the home to many important imported food products wholesale markets which often are the first link in distribution chains that cover all of China. These markets include: Lishui (fresh fruit), Huadu (fresh fruit), Yantian (seafood), Buji (consumer products), and Yide Road (nuts and consumer products).

II. Hot Prospects in the South China Region

III. 2001 South China Trade Delegations

The U.S. Agricultural Trade Office in Guangzhou is involved in the organizing and leading several trade delegations from the South China region. Delegation membership includes many South China importers and distributors. U.S. exporters interested in meeting delegation members at the respective shows on their itinerary should contact the US ATO Guangzhou.

Seafood Team: late March-early April 2001

This team will be in the United States from March 26 to April 9, 2001. The team not only plans to visit the Boston Seafood Show, but also will go to Washington D.C., New Jersey, and Hawaii. The team's membership is primarily composed of Hainan provincial fisheries officials, but will also include a few seafood traders.

Consumer Supermarket Products Team: early May 2001

This team will visit the United States from May 2 to 13, visiting the FMI show in Chicago and several other locations. Other stops in this team's journey include: Washington state, Washington D.C./Northern Virginia, and New York city. Team membership will be primarily composed of importers and supermarket executives from Guangdong, Fujian, and Guangxi provinces.

Restaurant Managers Team: late May 2001

This team plans to visit the United States from mid-May to early June and its main purpose is to visit the National Restaurant Association show in Chicago. The team also plans to visit the cities of Dallas, New Orleans, Las Vegas, and Los Angeles and get a taste of various U.S. cuisines.

Fresh Fruit Team: October 2001

The main purpose of this team is to visit the Produce Management Association's annual trade show and several major U.S. horticultural production regions. The visit will not occur until late October 2001, but team recruitment has already begun. At the present time, the specific itinerary for the team has not been set.

V. Upcoming Supermarket and Restaurant Promotions in the South China Region

ATO Guangzhou New Products Promotion

The ATO Guangzhou is now organizing its second new products promotion for south China. Scheduled for August/September 2001, this year's promotion is expected to be larger than last year's. Although the specific participating supermarket chains have not been chosen, the promotion will cover the cities of Guangzhou and Shenzhen.

The participation in the promotion is open to all U.S. consumer food and beverage products that are new to the south China region. Participation cost is U.S.$500 per product, plus 300 units of product. The fee includes overseas shipment, product health inspection, advertising, and other related activities. U.S. exporters who are interested in participating should contact either Ms. Lynda Jiang or Ms. Julie Zhu of the ATO Guangzhou for further details.

Holiday Inn 4th of July California Menu Promotion

The Holiday Inn of Guangzhou, with the assistance of the ATO Guangzhou, plans to hold a California Food promotion during the beginning of July. The promotion wants to highlight the wide variety of foods available in the state and the many ways in which they can be prepared. To help in this endeavor, the hotel and ATO hope to recruit an overseas chef for the promotion. For more information, contact the ATO Guangzhou.
